CASE STUDY - Mystery shopping program serves critical function in brand protection and quality control

✓ Situation

Our client is a membership organization for people over 50 and offers a full-line of branded insurance products to its members, including Medicare plans, long-term care insurance, major medical insurance for 50-64 year olds, auto insurance, and life insurance. In all, about seven million people are enrolled in its branded insurance products. In order to protect the client's brand and its members' interests, the client needs quality control measures to evaluate the carriers with which it has partnered on compliance, sales and service quality, and the overall member experience with agents, processes, and distribution channels.

✓ Solution

Person to Person Quality designed national mystery shopping programs for each insurance product and carrier, evaluating all sales distribution channels, including call centers, face-to-face meetings with local agents, community meetings, retail kiosks, and the web. Medicare Advantage channels and agents are shopped during the open enrollment period. Over 100 different performance criteria are evaluated – including channel access performance, lead referral processes, response times, service quality, product presentations, compliance, and member satisfaction with telesales and field agents.

✓ Results

Our mystery shopping findings have resulted in significant process improvements that have made the sales distribution channels work more efficiently for the clients' members. The client is able to address strengths and weaknesses in the member experience in a timely manner with its insurance carriers. Key metrics are measured on a quarterly basis to identify performance trends. Each quarter, Person to Person Quality presents the shop results to dozens of the clients' internal stakeholders, who in turn share the findings with insurance partners so action can be taken to constantly improve the member experience. The client uses the results to recognize outstanding performers at the call centers and in the field. The success of our insurance mystery shopping programs has resulted in the expansion of services to evaluate the member experience with the client's branded lifestyle products and discount programs.
